ABSTRACT

This report presents data revealing the participation rates of people with disabilities in Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) programs for the program year July 1, 1987 to June 30, 1988. Four charts are included in the paper. The charts display state-by-state participation rates for: both adults and youth with disabilities in the JTPA's Title II-A programs; youth with disabilities in Title II-B programs, which are the summer programs for youth; and persons with disabilities in Title III, which are the dislocated worker programs and are generally designed to serve an adult worker population. The fourth chart reports participation rates in Title II-A programs for each of the over 600 Service Delivery Areas (SDAs). All persons listed in all charts are program terminees, meaning that they are program participants who have separated because they have entered unsubsidized employment, completed youth employability enhancements, or terminated for other reasons. Analysis of the data shows that tremendous variation exists in participation rates from state to state and from SDA to SDA and that the number of persons with disabilities benefiting from JTPA programs grows larger every year. An appendix lists representatives of Governors' Committees on Employment of People with Disabilities and state vocational rehabilitation agencies. (JDD)

INTRODUCTION

Each year, with the cooperation of the U.S. Department of Labor, the President's Committee on Employment of People with Disabilities extracts and reviews the data revealing the participation rates of people with disabilities in our Nation's "Job Training Partnership Act" (JTPA) programs. We've been working together on this annual data review since the inception of the JTPA prgram in 1983.

In this year's report, covering Program Year 1987, (July 1, 1987 to June 30, 1988), we've again included in our data review, information on every Service Delivery Areas (SDA's) in the Nation. In addition, with the cooperation of the National Association of Private Industry Councils, we are sharing this information with JTPA administrators. And, we have added to our section on "technical assistance" (Page10).

Before we review the data there are a few notes of caution that are important to keep in mind. First of all, the data contained in this report were submitted to the U.S. Department of Labor by each SDA through their state level operating unit. The information is collected in the JTPA Annual Status Report. All of the numerical values contained in this report are subject to future verification and as a result, may increase or decrease slightly. When using the data it is important to keep these facts in mind. For reference purposes, these data were presented by the U.S. Department of Labor on December 7. 1988.

Another important note of caution relates to the difficulty in defining or determining with accuracy and consistency the population we call "handicapped" or "disabled". While Public Law 97-300, "The Job Training Partnership Act of 1983", does define the term "handicapped person", we're not sure to what degree this definition is uniformly observed in the data collection process. It just might be that some undercounting, or even overcounting, is taking place. Traditionally, defining a person with a disability is a difficult process, particularly for JTPA's intake workers who may not have had much experience with the population. Thus, when observing low participation rates, one of the preliminary responses that should be considered is a review of the data collection process and a determination of any definitional issues or problems that might exist. For the record, JTPA defines a "handicapped individual" as "any individual who has a physical or mental disability which for such individual constitutes or results in a substantial handicap to employment".

Lastly, the obligation to involve people with disabilites in our nation's JTPA programs is a shared one. It belongs to the various "Private Industry Councils" (PIC's), each Governor's "State Job Training Coordinating Council", and to those state and community groups who serve people with disabilities. Thus, when we observe a low participation rate for a particular state or SDA we must ask ourselves if we've all fulfilled our respective responsibilities to the population, including groups representing the needs of individuals with disabilities. If disability organizations aren't knocking on the door helping JTPA's decision-making bodies understand the employment needs of the population, than we all can and should be doing more. Again, the JTPA program represents a partnership. It's a shared responsibility.

In view of the above considerations, this report is designed to help foster partnerships. It's designed to determine opportunity. People with disabilities represent a population in dire need of the employment related services JTPA provides. Let's use this report to advance our opportunities to serve them; and, in turn, their employment opportunities.

THE DATA

Four charts are included in this paper. The first, Chart #1 (page 16), displays the state by state participation rates for both adults and youth with disabilities in JTPA's Title II-A programs. Title II-A programs represent the single largest program under JTPA. Statistics showed that among all terminees for title II-A programs in PY '87, (Program Year 1987), Adults with disabilities = 9.1%; and, Youth with disabilities = 12.8%. All persons listed in all charts are program terminees. Terminees are defined as JTPA program participants who have separated because they've: 1.) entered unsubsidized employment; 2.) youth employability enhancements (attained PIC recognized competencies, entered non-title II training, returned to full-time school or completed a major level of education); and, 3.) all other terminations successful or otherwise (e.g. drop-outs).

The prior year's figures (PY '86) or national average for Title II-A's terminees were Adults with disabilities = 8.6%; and Youth with disabilities = 12.2%. The figures reported in Chart 1 represent a significant increase over the prior year's figures. It's worth noting that every Program Year of JTPA has demonstrated an increase over the prior year's figures.

Chart #2 (page 18), lists the state-by-state participation rates for youth with disabilities in Title II-B programs of JTPA. Title II-B programs are the summer programs for youth age 16 to 21 and, in specific circumstances include 14 and 15 year olds. Title II-B's national average for individuals with disabilities in all states and territories for PY '87 was Youth with disabilities = 14%. Again, persons listed here are program terminees.

The prior year's figure (PY '85) or national average for Title II-B was Youth with disabilities = 12%. This year is the third year in a row Title II-B programs have shown an increase.

Chart #3 (page 20), lists the state by state participation rates for persons with disabilities in Title III of JTPA. Title III programs are the dislocated worker programs and are generally designed to serve an adult worker population. Title III's national average for indiviuals with disabilities in all states and territories for PY '87 was 2.8%.

Title III's prior year's figure (PY '86) or national average for individuals with disabilities = 2.6%. In PY '85 the national average was 3%.

Chart #4 (page 22), lists each Service Delivery Area's (SDA) participation rates for both adults and youth with disabilities in title II-A programs only. Again, persons counted are program terminees.

This is the second time we've reviewed the data at the SDA level. You may wish to refer to last year's edition of this report in order to determine local trends.

OBSERVATIONS

As we review these data, three general concerns or observations struck us. The first was the tremendous variation in participation rates that continues to exist from state to state and from SDA to SDA. The range of state level participation rates is very noticeable in both Title II-A and Title II-B programs. As we reviewed Title II-A, Chart #1, we noted that the lowest state level participation rate for adults with disabilities was 1.0%; and, the highest was 26.8%. The range for state level participation rates in Title II-A was even larger when looking at the youth with disabilities figures. The lowest jurisdiction recorded a participation rate of 0.5% for youth with disabilities; and the highest was 49.9%!

This wide variation in participation rates at the state level has existed for the full time of the program. In fact, the range or difference between the low to high state grows larger almost every year. Here are the figures for the last four years for Title II-A only.

Title II-A

	PY'84		PY'85		PY'86		PY'87
	low	high	low	high	low	high	low	high
Adults	3.0	24.0	1.9	19.0	2.0	24.7	1.0	26.8
Youth	1.7	53.3	1.4	49.1	1.0	55.9	0.5	49.9

Similar variations exist for Title II-B programs and, to a lesser extent, for Title III program.

When searching for a probable cause for this variation, our first reaction was to compare each state's percentage of citizens with disabilities to see if some states have either a far greater or far lesser percentage of people with disabilities to draw from. All data suggests a surprisingly constant percentage of people with disability from state to state. Hence, we can't explain this tremendous variation in terms of the availability or prevalence of disability in a particular state.

Further, investigation seems to point us in the direction of two other influential factors. The first of these relates to the involvement of groups representing people with disabilities in the policy or management of JTPA programs, at either the state or SDA level (most often both). In other words, in states where active organizations exist, promoting the employment related needs of people with disabilities, higher particiation rates are most often realized. And, we suspect, the converse is true.

The second factor that seems to contribute to the wide variation in participation rates from state to state, and possibly, from SDA to SDA, concerns states with unemployment rates higher than the national average. In those states the participation of either adults or youth with disabilities in Title II-A programs, tends to fall below the JTPA national average.

The cross referencing of state unemployment rates with state level participation rates in JTPA's Title II-A programs seemed to indicate that the converse also tends to be true. In other words, states experiencing unemployment rates lower than the national average, tend to show JTPA participation rates higher than the national average for either youth or adults with disabilities or both!

To be more specific, when we compare state unemployment rates with participation rates in Title II-A programs we noted that among the 26 states with high unemployment rates (above the national average) 23 states had JTPA (Title II-A) participation rates for either adults or youth with disabilities that were lower than the JTPA national average. When we looked at the other 25 states with unemployment rates lower than the national average we found that 24 of them had JTPA participation rates for either adults or youth with disabilities that were higher than the national average.

While it's difficult for us to explain why this phenomenon exists, we can say that people with disabilities do represent a new or relatively untapped resource in terms of eligible JTPA program participants. Hence, when a state's unemployment rate is low and the traditional pool of eligibles is reduced, the tendency is to look towards people with disabilities as a new or expanded source of eligible participants. While this phenomenon represents an asset in states with low unemployment rates, it becomes a negative factor in states where unemployment rates are high.

The third and last observation we'd like to make with regard to these data is to call attention to actual numbers of persons with disabilities that are benefiting from JTPA programs. It grows larger every year. During the period covered by this report (PY '87) the following terminee totals were recorded:

Title II-A	--	88,469	people with disabilities
Title II-B	--	78,146	youth with disabilities
Title III	--	3,561	adults with disabilities
		170,176	Total persons with disabilities terminated

It's clear that our nation's Job Training Partnership Act program has become a major employment training resource for our citizens with disabilities. Certainly, more can and should be done to increase their participation particularly in specific areas. However, on balance, JTPA has shown a commitment and responsibility to people with disabilities.

STRATEGIES AND RESOURCES

FOR JTPA ADMINISTRATORS...

As we strive to include people with disabilities in our Nation's "Job Training Partnership Act" programs, we must be cognizant of the special strategies and resources that can help us to do that. Here are some of the strategies that can assist a State Job Training Coordinating Council, a Private Industry Council or grantee in their efforts to include people with disabilities in their programs.

1. Review the membership makeup of the Private Industry Council or State Job Training Coordinating Council.

   - Be sure that individuals who are disabled or who represent the employment related needs of people with disabilities are included as members on both decision-making bodies.

2. Seek data and other types of information on the employment situation facing people with disabilities in your area.

   - Contact your State's Governor's Committee or State Director of Vocational Rehabilitation or similar organization for information and input on this subject (see Appendix).
   - If you need information on job accommodations for people with disabilities, call our toll free telephone number for assistance. It's 1-800-JAN-7234. It operates from 8:00 AM - 8:00 PM (east coast time), Monday through Friday. It can help with specific cases.

3. When establishing priorities for funding or issuing requests for proposals, be sure to indicate the need to serve those people with disabilities who are in the group being targeted (i.e. women with disabilities, minorities with disabilities, displaced workers with disabilities, etc.).

4. Publicize the "family of one" authority for youth with disabilities among all intake workers and beyond.

5. Be sure to engage in informational outreach activities with the variety of organizations and agencies involved in serving people with disabilities. These include: State Vocational Rehabilitation programs; State and local special education units; organizations serving people with disabilities; organizations of people with disabilities; parent groups; and, more. For more information on these groups, contact your State's Committee serving people with disabilities (See Appendix).

FOR GROUPS SERVING PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES

The true potential of our Nation's JTPA program in serving people with disabilities has yet to be fully realized. As we review the variety of programming options that have already been developed in various locations around the country, it has become increasingly clear that JTPA holds enormous potential to serve the employment related needs of people with disabilities.

Here are just a few brief examples of how groups serving people with disabilities are utilizing JTPA resources in local employment related programs. This listing and our experience with JTPA convince us that the possibilities are endless.

Project Work-Able in Akron, Ohio, utilizes Title II-A's 8% Set-Aside funds to support an employment training and placement program for individuals with histories of mental illness. A supported employment model is one of the key components to the program.

The Capilouto Center for the Deaf in Montgomery, Alabama, receives support from JTPA to conduct an employment placement and training service for individuals who are deaf in a 15 county region of central Alabama. Numerous area agencies refer deaf individuals to the Center for this employment related program.

The Curative Rehabilitation Center in Green Bay, Wisconsin, conducts a JTPA employment program serving, amoung others, elderly persons with disabilities. The local PIC and Job Service provide additional support by lending office space as well as making referrals.

WorkHawaii of Honolulu, Hawaii, pools the resources of the local school system, State Department of Education and JTPA's Title II-A "Exemplary Youth" funds. The program assists selected special education students with their transition from school to employment.

The Brevard Achievement Center of Rockledge, Florida, operates three separate JTPA employment programs serving persons with multiple disabilities. One is a supported employment model for individuals with multiple disabilities. The second is an On the Job Training (OJT) program for persons with mental retardation. And, the third is designed to involve more directly the employer in the conducting of the job training.

The Association for Retarded Citizens of Harrison County, West Virginia, utilizes JTPA, Title II-A, 6% set-aside money to assist drop-outs with disabilities with their employment needs. This support is augmented with other local community support.

These are but a few examples of how JTPA is involving itself with the employment related needs of people with disabilities. The key to getting JTPA involved is to educate your local Private Industry Council concerning the employment needs of the population; and, in turn, to offer them proposed programs that they can support.

Remember the two basic rules: 1.) document the problem; and, 2.) offer a solution.

Finally, get a copy of the actual JTPA legislation and read it! It offers tremendous variety and endless possibilities. But, they won't happen until someone or group translates them into actual programming ideas.
